NIKKO'S SUSTAINABILITY

"Designing a sustainable future for the next 100 years"

At NIKKO, we're taking many steps in line with the principles of a circular economy. In a linear economy model in which massive amounts of resources are mined to manufacture massive amounts of tableware which are then thrown out as soon as they're cracked or chipped, there is no future for the porcelain industry. NIKKO must lead the way in tackling biodiversity loss and climate change in order to continue manufacturing porcelain for the next century and preserve a rich culinary culture along with the delightful times it provides. Sustainability of the Earth is also Nikko's sustainability.

"NIKKO Circular Lab" is a cross-departmental research and development project. It's the driving force behind the company's steps toward establishing a porcelain manufacturing process based on a circular economy. From procuring raw materials to designing products, logistics, product usage, and collection, the company works as a team to create a more sustainable and circular business throughout the value chain.

Environmentally conscious cushioning and packaging

We have decreased the amount of single-use plastic bags and use scrap material instead to keep the packaging eco-friendly.

Manufacturing durable high-quality tableware

Reusing materials in other areas

Developing cadmium-free pigments

■A campaign invoking the need to care for the world "#Single use Planet"

This light, strong, long-lasting mug made from Nikko fine bone china pays homage to the disposable plastic coffee cup that has been a familiar sight in the Japanese business scene for a long time, with the aim of reducing plastic and based on the desire to create opportunities to think about the global environment. This mug represents a call for a reduction of single use plastics and highlights the importance of our "single use planet" .

Nikko will also donate a portion of the sales from the #Single use Planet cup to the UMINARI non-profit organization, which is working on the marine plastics problem. We hope that every little thought from the people who purchase this product will help the earth in the future.

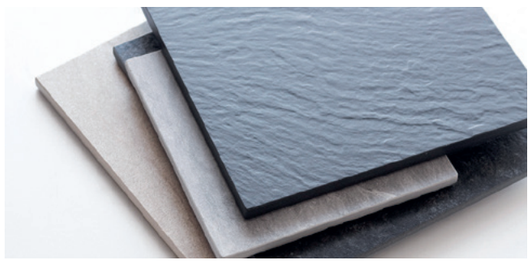

■"uptile dish"– Upcycling disposed tiles as tableware, in our very own factory!

"uptile dish" is an upcycled tableware created by processing surplus tiles and tiles that had been kept for repair work for a fixed period that had hitherto been disposed of in NIKKO's BAINCOUTURE made-to-order bathroom business's manufacturing process.

NIKKO's expert processing technologies for minimizing the amount of waste created from our limited resources is utilized to create a handy, stylish, and sophisticated look. And with our years of passion and experience in the porcelain industry, we know how grace the table. By managing the scrap tiles, processing them into products, shipping, and selling them all in-house, we have managed to cut back on the energy used to recover the resource. It's an upcycling that only NIKKO, a company with both a bathroom and porcelain division, could have created. (Only sold in Japan.)
